Road to flexibility and freedom

MANY people don't fit the nine to five mould and want a career with greater flexibility and freedom that still brings financial success.

While these types of career options are rare, Queensland's peak taxi industry body, Taxi Council Queensland (TCQ) believes it can offer these benefits plus job security and advancement.

TCQ represents everyone in the taxi industry including drivers, owners, operators and booking companies.

For generations, the industry has helped people embark on a path that started by driving cabs and ended as owners of taxi licences.

Many drivers have caught the taxi bug and invested in their own licence.

Some have become so successful they now own multitudes of taxis and are in turn assisting others to break into the industry.

Taxi drivers and operators are self-employed business people, setting their own hours and heading towards their own personal goals.

This style of self-employment continues to provide a very flexible work environment.

Recently TCQ announced a recruitment drive with the aim of attracting new drivers from a cross-section of the community. Including students, women, the semi-retired and those wanting a career change.

Taxi drivers are people from all walks of life and regions of the world.
